Memorial Hymn.

WRITTEN BY MR. ELIOT SMITH, FOR HARRY RUST POST, G. A. R., by request of the Committee.

Bring beautiful flowers for graves of the slain!

From garden, field, hillside, and blossoming plain!

Twine them with roses and violets blue,

In memory of those who for country and true

Who fell on the mountain, on hillside, in dell—

And scatter with a glory their course they

Reverently, bravely, bravely they

Earth's fairest blossoms, O'er a Nation's tear-stained

All, all were heroes, east, west, north, and south!

One loyal to freedom, to country and State,

One true to their home and their own, and

Then twine the fresh garlands, in honor to-day,

Alone in our hearts for the free and the gay.

Together they fell—and together they sleep,

And Peace bids her angels o'er both, vigils

Keep!

The blood-stains are washed from our valleys

And clear from our rivers and musical rills!

While Love, never-dying, twines laurels new

Of Peace, and of Fame, o'er the blue and the gray.

When Time sweeps away our short lives in his flight,

The flowers and the garlands will be left to tell

That none will be left to remember the day,

When first the brave and the true and the gay

Norway, the Eagle that summoned men to fight,

By thousand from east, and from west, and

Till the brave and the true and the gay

Shook the earth and valleys, with war's mad

Even then, generations will come as we now

"The Pilgrim's spirit is not dead;

It walks in noon's broad light,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,

And it watches the beat of the glorious dead,
